THE COUNCIL OF HORSES.

Upon a time a neighing steed, That grazed among a numerous breed, With mutiny had fired the train, And spread dissension through the plain. On matters that concerned the State The council met in grand debate. A colt, whose eye-balls flamed with ire, Elate with strength and youthful fire, In haste stepped forth before the rest, And thus the listening throng addressed :

"Alas! how abject is our race, Condemned to slavery and disgrace! Shall we our servitude retain, Because our sires have borne the chain? Consider, friends, your strength and might, 'Tis conquest to assert your right. How combrous is the glided coach! The pride of man is our reproach. Were we designed for daily toil, To drag the ploughshare through the soil To sweat in barness on the road, To groan beneath the carrier's load ? How feeble are the two-legged kind! What force is in our nerves combined! Shall then our noble jaws submit To form and champ the galling bit? Shall haughty man my back bestride? Shall the sharp spurs provoke my side! Forbid it, friends! Reject the rein; Your shame, your infamy disdain, Let him the lion first control, And still the tiger's famished growl. Let us, like them, our freedom claim. And make him tremble at our name."

A general nod approved the cause, And all the circle neighed applause. When, lo! with grave and solemn pace, A steed advanced before the race, With age and long experience wise: Around he cast his thoughtful eyes, And to the murmurs of his train

Thus spoke the Nester of the plain "When I had health and strength, like you The toils of servitude I knew. Now grateful man rewards my pains, And gives me all these wide domains. At will I crop the year's increase; My latter life is rest and peace. I grant, to man we lend our pains, Help him to cultivate the plains; But doth not he divide the care Through all the seasons of the year? How many thousand structures rise To fence us from inclement skies? For us he bears the sultry day, And stores up all our winters's hav He sows, he reaps the harvest's grain; We share the toil, and share the gain. Since every creature was decreed To serve each other's mutual need, Appease your discontented mind,

And act the part by Heaven assigned The tumult ceased. The colt submitted, And, like his ancestors, was bitted. -Gay's Fables.

LETTER FROM THE ROAD

QUAKING ASP FLAT, Oct. 28, 1875. EDITOR MINER:-I sent you s few items from our camp near this place a month ago; at that time looking to the westward nothing could be seen but rude hills covered with scrub oak and grease-wood descending abruptly into Skull Valley. We were there for the purpose of grabbing out these bushes, rolling away the boulders which lay concealed among them and converting the beds in which these granite monarchs had reposed for ages perhaps, into a wagon road over which in future will come the merchandise for your thriving young city, and supplies for the Government posts beyond. The undertaking seemed a very discouraging one, and indeed nothing short of the very best of engineering talent and ripe judgment could have solved the problem of, "How shall we get a road that can be traveled by heavy freight teams from the low valley to the summit of this high mountain in so short a distance;" but the mental problem was solved, muscle has added the finishing stroke and as good a mountain road as ever traversfeet close to the surface that assay from ed as rude a mountain invites the frieghter $100 to $18,000 per ton.
